I purposely refrain from mentioning candy on Christmas Day—for why speak of the obvious. There is bound speak of the obvious. There is bound to be candy before and after breakfast and throughout the day; in all probability it will not need be included in the housekeeper's "market money," so it does not vitally concern her. A few after-dinner mints, perhaps, could be added.

haps, could be added.

There is one suggestion to make to the housewife before starting her buying. That is, to glance over the market quotations in the morning paper before starting out. No man who has planned a little unusual outlay of money would rush into his purchase without first finding about what the cost would likely be. A woman will generally buy of Jones, Smith or Brown "because she has always done so," not because they are likely to provide the best at the most reasonable price.

These meals have been arranged for six persons, and it will be seen that something to it which is likely harm-something to it which is likely harm-ful. They have mistreated it and robbed it of nourishment. A great many women injure their hair when washing it.

Washing the hair is a serious matter. Washing the hair is a serious matter. The professional hair dresser accomplishes it with dexerity. When she completes the work she can dress it in a way that it will look dressed. Women who wash their own hair seldom meet with much success. I wonder if they always take the care that the professional hair dresser exercises? I should think not, since they do not obtain the same results. obtain the same results.

The reason why it is difficult to dress Little Miss Margaret Elley has re-urned to Richmond, after spending ome time with her grandparents, Mr. to dress until amounts that it becomes matty and loses its luster. Of course, it is necessary to wash the hair, and it is difficult to name the definite intervels at which it should be washed. That all depends upon color, exposure, and its nature. Some hair is more oily and therefore catches and holds more dust. The larger the product of oil the ways frequent the product of the produ uct of oil the more frequent the neces-sity for washing. But if the hair is washed in "hard" water that is filled with alkalies which remove all the oily substance, it cannot be expected that it will be easy to dress until there

There is a science that can be applied to the shampooing of the head and hair. It is not necessary to leave the hair void of oil, either lifeless or bristling and without gloss.

Most any soap will remove oil and dust, but it is not every soap and preparation that will satisfactorily cleaness the hair without destroying the gloss.
